Title: Loss and Travel: A Critical Review of Literature Author: Uditha Ramanayake¹, Cheryl Cockburn-Wootten¹, & Alison J. McIntosh² Affiliation: University of Waikato¹; Auckland University of Technology² Contact: rmuar1@students.waikato.ac.nz Session Type: Presentation

Abstract:

Loss is a universal human experience that every person encounters (Hooyman & Kramer, 2008). In our life journey, loss comes in many forms, including suffering the death of a loved one, living with chronic illness, facing disabilities, giving birth to a child with disabilities, separation, being abused, unemployment, and many others. Even positive changes such as relocation, career movement, or retirement may also bring feelings of loss (Bozarth, 1994). Additionally, this all coincides with changes relating to aging, both physical and mental well-being (Kazeminia, Del Chiappa, & Jafari, 2015). These changes signal the reality of significant losses, which are often viewed negatively, affecting their experiences and inclination to travel (Nimrod & Rotem, 2010). Specifically, many scholars neglect that, for some, loss can prompt positive reflection of their own mortality, existence, and purpose, which may (re)shape their travel experiences (Eisenhandler, 2005). Additionally, how loss can be shaped by both context and historical, personal significant life events has not been considered. This paper aims to critically review these issues within the tourism literature to ascertain how loss is conceptualised and understood in relation to its impact for travel. Overall, we endeavour to situate tourism and loss within a perspective that acknowledges humane, emotional, and existential lived experience.

References:

- Bozarth, A.R. (1994). Life is goodbye, life is hello: Grieving well through all kinds of loss. Hazelden Publishing.
- Eisenhandler, S.A. (2005). Religion is the finding thing. Journal of Gerontological Social Work, 45(1–2), 85–103.
- Hooyman, N.R., & Kramer, B.J. (2008). Living through loss: Interventions across the life span. New York: Columbia University Press.
- Kazeminia, A., Del Chiappa, G., & Jafari, J. (2015). Seniors' travel constraints and their coping strategies. Journal of Travel Research, 54(1).
- Nimrod, G., & Rotem, A. (2010). Between relaxation and excitement: Activities and benefits gained in retirees' tourism. International Journal of Tourism Research, 12(1), 65–78.